“In my art, there are two main strands. In the first, I explore the relationship of wildlife to the landscape through drawing on paper. In my images of wildlife, I try to capture the animal’s intimate relationship to the natural environment that often suggests a mythological dimension.

Owing to my interest in animal behavior, I admire the artistic tradition of naturalists John James Audubon and Roger Tory Peterson, and their gift for close observation. But I also love the physicality of an intuitive drawing style that draws upon an open-ended process of spontaneous mark-making.”

Sheli Petersen currently manages Peru State College graphic design program.
